Core Teachings of Universalism

- that whatever else God may be or not be, God is love — and that even if we reject belief in God at all, we can still believe in the power of love
- that no individual or tradition possesses the whole truth, but that each grasps a piece of what is true, perhaps several such pieces
- that all people are somehow sacred, whether we call this an inner divinity or simply human dignity
- and that the same fate—whatever it may be—awaits us all.

Stefan Jonasson

World-Wide Love

"The spirit of Love will be intensified to Godly proportions when reciprocal love exists between the entire human race and each of its individual members. That love must be based upon mutual respect for the differences in color, language, and worship, even as we appreciate and accept with gratitude the differences that tend to unite the male and female of all species. We do not find those differences obstacles to love."

George de Benneville

Sorrow for those affected by the shooting situation in New Brunswick. Praying that the receive comfort and love, and that justice will be rightly served.
Shovonne, Ontario, Canada

Joyous to be joined in fellowship as we start work Friday on another film project. So many fine people contributing their skills and talents
Julian, Chicago

Joy that my teenage daughter is on her way to Italy with others from her school, and for the life-changing experience this will be for her. Concern for her being so far away.
Erin, Missouri

I am over joyed to have found this
